Ms. Deichmann and Ms. Shultz utilize the internet in the school parking lot as they plan their next steps of instruction. This is the new normal.

Ms. Schmidt and Ms. Shafer met at the community drop-off spots to greet their students and deliver the work to the parents.
Rae Scholes shows us what/where her new classroom is. She is working outdoors to get some fresh air while doing school work.

Good Morning!

Here are the worksheets for today. Please remember to use the videos and notes if needed.

These worksheets will also need 1 piece of paper, type answers.

Journal: Tuesday

Composing a three paragraph essay. Why would the page be scarier if there is a cave with bats?

Fourth grade assignments now look like this. Teachers post the work, kids and parents make sure it gets completed, then they take photos of the completed work and return it to the teacher for feedback.
Teachers plan ZOOM meetings with small groups, classrooms, recess, study halls, and more. They can see and interact with their students, but it is definitely not the same. In fact, one mom struggled to get her son to attend a meetings, so she took her phone into his room and made him ZOOM from there. The support from homes has been fantastic.

The stats for the PJC are incredible to follow. In the past 28 days we had 4.1K posts, comments, and reactions, which was actually down 66% from the month before. At any given moment, there are posts to approve, work to check, and teachers using it to communicate to their families.
Principal's Meetings look a little different, but the work is the same. As a group we have lobbied for restoring funding, talked about grading procedures, shared ideas, resources, and had some laughs. Faculty meetings look very similar and have lively discussion!
